Play Frisbee Golf!

Matt Faeth and Tristan Hightower demonstrate the newest sport at Riverfield.

STAFF WRITER

A transition has taken place during Upper School lunch periods, before and after school. In the past, the sport of Jungle Pong prevailed with the majority of boys here at Riverfield. But Frisbee Golf has taken over very quickly.

Jon Kelley and Mr. Breig have developed an entire 18 hole course that winds through our beautiful campus. Mr. Breig and Michael Kelley hold two course records at 8 under par on the full 18. (This Frisbee Golfer wishes to remain anonymous concerning his own score.)

When I asked course record holder Mr. Breig for a comment, he had this to say, "Frisbee Golf, or Disc Golf as it is officially called, is fun. It overlaps golf rules and format of play with different equipment. The Riverfield course is balanced with competitive distances and targets that meander through the interior and exterior portions of the campus. The course takes you up 'Big Nasty' and across the football field."

We only use top of the line Frisbees that have been approved by the D.G.A. On average, these Frisbees cost $10. Some of the Frisbees that have experienced the most success at our course are the "Champion Groove" and "The Epic."

Although beautiful, our course is challenging, and in the five months that Frisbee Golf has existed at Riverfield, approximately $400 dollars worth of Frisbees has been M.I.A., lost, broken, drowned or stranded.

Frisbee Golf offers a welcome respite from a hard day of classes. Everyone has their own favorite escape, but some have yet to find one that suits them. If you would like to try Frisbee Golf to see how it fits you, just ask Mr. Breig or any of the players here at Riverfield.

Welfare drug tests?

By Sam Laney
NEWS EDITOR

Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) is a government program that offers financial assistance to families in poverty. A recent bill passed an Oklahoma Senate panel that would require all those seeking assistance or currently receiving assistance to submit to a drug test. The law would only apply if there was "reasonable cause" for suspicion. All those with a confirmed positive result would be ineligible to receive TANF assistance, and would be restricted from applying again for one to three years.

The Department of Human Services estimates this testing could cost as much as $3 million. This does not include the cost of retesting to eliminate false positives, or the cost of personnel to administer tests.

Some believe there is a problem with the constitutionality of the practice. Previous state attempts to implement similar drug testing procedures have been struck down as unconstitutional because they violate the Fourth Amendment protection from unreasonable searches. Others argue that it is perfectly reasonable since those who would be tested are asking for financial assistance.

Which is more important—the privacy of an individual or making sure the money is given to those who need it most? Anyone who tests positive probably does need help, but the money may go to fuel their addiction. Help is not help if it is the wrong kind, and this bill could aid in determining what kind of help is needed.

Tulsa family chosen for 'Extreme Makeover'

By Chris Dickey
STAFF WRITER

Can you imagine coming back from vacation to a new, bigger, and better house where your old one stood? This actually happened three weeks ago to my friend, Jared Starkweather, a sophomore at Edison.

His family was picked by ABC's "Extreme Makeover: Home Edition." They were notified they had been chosen on Thursday morning, January 28, and they left on vacation later that day. While they were gone, their home at 1124 S. Indianapolis was torn down and a new house was built in its place.

Thousands of Tulsa volunteers worked around the clock for nearly a week in the ice and snow. So many volunteered that some had to be turned away. Greg Simmons, the project's principal builder, said those who came to help were "the hardest-working volunteers we've ever seen. It was like a miracle."

The University of Tulsa gave each of the three Starkweather children a four-year undergraduate scholarship as well as giving Ethan, Jared's youngest brother, audiology evaluations and speech therapy.

Ethan has Prader-Willi syndrome, a rare, life-threatening genetic disorder. His condition is kept under control by a strict schedule, low-calorie diet, therapy, and daily injections. The new house was designed with his needs in mind.

Now Jared and his family are eager to watch their episode of "Extreme Makeover: Home Edition" which is scheduled to air sometime in March so they can see for themselves how their new house was built.

Host Ty Pennington (far right) shows the Starkweather family its brand new home on February 3 as volunteers look on.

RAVEN SOCCER SEASON is now underway! The boys played their first game last night against Summit Christian. The girls play their first game Tuesday at Ft. Gibson . . .

Riverfield's boys' and girls' basketball teams had stellar seasons. The Lady Ravens finished with a record of 12-9, and the Ravens broke a school record for wins in a season with 20+ wins, finishing the season at 21-5. Two of the boys' losses were against CHEF, and three against Rejoice.

On February 12, Riverfield hosted Senior Night during the last home game of the season. With one of the largest and loudest crowds in school history, the Lady Ravens lost to CHEF 35-40 in a hard-fought battle. Looking to avenge a previous loss against CHEF, the Ravens also played a tough game but lost 53-59.

During halftime of the boy's game, the seniors playing basketball and cheering were recognized. Seniors for the girls are Lynley Fox, Darcie Golden, Alayna McClendon, Sarah McGunegill, Marisa Morgan, Abby Saizow, Ana Tamasese, and Molly Tierney. There is only one senior for the boys: Michael Kelley.

For Riverfield's last basketball games of the 2009-10 season, the teams traveled to Coffeyville, Kansas. The girls lost 25-43 in a tough contest to Tyro Christian who had one player that seemed unstoppable. The boys, only up by 9 at halftime, won their game 81-51. Michael Kelley finished the season with some of his best games ever. Against CHEF he made 38 points, and against Tyro Christian he had a season high of 41 points.

Riverfield basketball will be back next year, looking to build on this year's success. The teams wish to thank all who came out to support them this season.

NBA's Black Friday trade review

By Ben Rao
SPORTS EDITOR

Unlike the Olympic luge tragedy, the NBA has recently faced a threat that comes out of the realm of competition. When Gilbert Arenas and Javaris Crittenton brought guns into the Washington Wizards' locker room, shockwaves were sent around the league. Both players were immediately suspended for the rest of the season, putting an exclamation point on what has been a dreadful season. With the team playing poorly, GM Ernie Grunfeld decided to unload his players with the biggest contracts to clear up cap space for this summer's free agent frenzy. Now Antawn Jamison and Caron Butler are with new teams, and the Wizards are looking to rebuild.

Here's an overview of what went down on the NBA's Black Friday.

1. Cavs get Antawn Jamison and Sebastian Telfair. Wizards get Al Thornton, Zydrunas Ilgauskas, rights to Emir Preldzic, and 2010 first round pick. Clippers get Drew Gooden.

Cleveland finally made a big deal to get another big time scorer to complement LeBron James. How well Jamison plays may determine how far Cleveland goes in the playoffs. Also, Ilgauskas will most likely be bought out of his contract by Washington and will get to re-sign with Cleveland 30 days afterward. Cleveland's GM Danny Ferry has probably won himself executive of the year with this great deal.

2. Dallas gets Caron Butler, Brendan Haywood, DeShawn Stevenson, and cash. Washington gets Josh Howard, Drew Gooden, Quinton Ross, and James Singleton.

Washington traded Gooden the day after this deal. Dallas owner Mark Cuban is always willing to make deals, and this was no exception. He traded his young but struggling star in Josh Howard for the more proven veteran Caron Butler. For this year it makes the Mavs better, which is what's important. Yet, like when the Mavs traded Devin Harris for Jason Kidd, they may soon regret not keeping their young talent.

3. Blazers get Marcus Camby. Clippers get Steve Blake, Travis Outlaw, and cash.

This might be the most underrated deal of the day. The Blazers picked up Camby's expiring contract, and he will instantly contribute on the defensive end. Having a physical center like Camby will help Portland in the playoffs against teams like the Spurs and Lakers with star big men like Tim Duncan, Pau Gasol, and Andrew Bynum.

Jones endangers NFL

By Ben Rao
SPORTS EDITOR

From Jerry Jones' luxurious office, he can look down onto the field at his brand new stadium. $1.2 billion was spent to build Cowboys Stadium, a retractable-roofed behemoth that seats 80,000 fans. More than 100,000 were there when the Cowboys hosted the Giants in their first game of the past season. Jones' team, at a net worth of $1.6 billion, is the richest in the NFL. In its first year, Cowboys Stadium will host a championship boxing match, the Final Four, and the Super Bowl.

Jones is flat out the most financially successful owner of any team in professional sports. Yet Jones' business prowess has come at the expense of his teams' on-field success. A man who once built a football dynasty by winning three Super Bowls in the early '90s has turned the Cowboys' once proud franchise into a sideshow in suburban Dallas. From signing players like Tank Johnson, Terrell Owens, and Adam

Jones, to hiring Wade Phillips to be the head coach, the Cowboys are now less compatible than the cast of Jersey Shore at a MENSAs meeting.

In addition to these miscasts, Jones is now endangering not only his own team but the entire NFL. As the league nears the end of its current collective bargaining agreement, Jones has tried to use his weight to make the agreement more favorable for the owners. As of this writing, the owners are asking the players union for 60% of football revenue, with Jones at the forefront of these talks. Jones has also been vocal about ending revenue sharing, which benefits teams in smaller markets. This way, Jones' empire in Dallas would become even richer.

It is this greedy, selfish attitude that has ruined baseball and its competitive balance. Now it looks like Jones is trying to move the NFL in the same direction. It seems as though Jones is more concerned about filling his bank account than his trophy case.

MLB needs salary cap

By Matt Faeth
STAFF WRITER

In the National Football League (NFL) and National Basketball Association (NBA), every single franchise involved in the league has a chance to win a championship for one reason. That reason is because a salary cap exists.

A salary cap is a limit on the amount of money a team can spend on player salaries. The limit exists as a per-player limit, a total limit for the team's roster, or both, and it is meant to create fairness.

In major league baseball (MLB), a salary cap doesn't exist. So cities with larger markets and therefore more revenue for players' salaries can pay as much as they want to buy their teams to the top.

In 2009, the largest MLB payroll was being shoveled out by the giant that is the New York Yankees. Their payroll is a staggering $201,449,289. The other New York team, the Mets, pays considerably less, but is still second in the league at $135,773,988.

On the other side of the spectrum lie the poor Florida Marlins, whose home is found in humble South Florida and whose payroll is only $36,814,000.

As it stands now, only the New Yorks, Philadelphias, St. Louises, LAs, and Dallases of the world will be able to succeed in the baseball world.

A salary cap needs to be implemented in major league baseball in order to give each city a fair shot at gaining a pennant and make America's favorite pastime a top tier sport once again.

Riverfield's spring sports begin practices

By Bryce Rossler
STAFF WRITER

With Riverfield basketball put to rest and spring sports knocking at the door, it's obvious that March is almost here. The addition of soccer to the previous programs of golf and tennis proves that the school is looking to expand its booming athletic department.

Recent news about the inaugural soccer season has been buzzing around, and many expect it to be a successful season. With former MLS player Michael Nsien hired to coach the boys' team, former ORU player Lindsey Watts to head the girls' team, and veteran soccer players from years past already attending Riverfield, this first competitive soccer season looks to be a decent one.

Coach Watts optimistically stated, "It's our first season for ladies' soccer, which is so exciting. These girls can know that every play they make, every bit of effort they put in, is building the future of soccer at Riverfield for years to come. The 2010 team will leave a legacy upon which we will build all future successes."

Golf, which will start on Monday (a week later than the other sports,) is headed by Coach Bogle. Led by seniors Michael Kelley and Kalob Crowe, the golf team looks to have a promising season, as they're on par with all the other sports. Coach Bogle made the following comments. "Michael and Kalob are talented golfers. They will lead a solid team that includes returners Ryan Peake and Matt Faeth along with newcomers Zack Allen, Robb Scott, and Michael Sampson."

The first spring sport to be held at Riverfield, tennis is now entering its fifth competitive season. Mr. Clark has arranged a full schedule for all the teams, from middle school boys and girls to high school boys and girls, with a combined 20+ matches for each team. He feels good about the returning players, with Tristan Hightower and Kenny Kite leading the charge for the boys, and Ramsey Talladivedula leading the girls' team.

If you haven't signed up to participate in one of the spring sports yet, talk to the coaches as soon as possible. We'd love to have you!

TV Review: AI & ABDC

By Meghan Kelkar
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR

January saw the beginning of another season of both American Idol and America's Best Dance Crew.

Both shows opened in audition mode for competition, and both feature Randy Jackson. It is Season 9 of AI and Season 5 of ABDC. Both have replaced one of their three main judges. Paula Abdul was replaced on AI by Kara DioGuardi, who was a fourth judge last season. On ABDC, Shane Sparks was replaced with former R&B artist Omarion. Sparks is facing legal issues, but hopefully he will return next season. Abdul will not be returning to American Idol.

"The Hollywood Rounds" for American Idol kicked off on February 9, and the show is now down to the top 24. America's Best Dance Crew is still searching for the best crews across America and auditioning them in Hollywood. They already have their chosen crews for the live show from the South. Five crews will be auditioned from each of the other regions for the live show.

Stay tuned to see how both of these popular shows turn out this season!

ART ON THE STREETS

PHOTOS BY KENZIE ZWAYER

There exists a hidden gallery spread across the alleyways and brick walls of Tulsa. You may have seen some of its murals and graffiti, or maybe you haven't yet strolled down the right streets. Commissioned murals spanning the entire sides of businesses, such as the White Owl Pub on Cherry Street (top two photos) exist alongside colorful graffiti, stenciled silhouettes, and portraits. Take some time to look around you while you're out and about—there's plenty to see!

Movie Review: Tetsuo

By Malachi Keeter
FEATURES EDITOR

On the list of movies you've never heard of, Tetsuo: The Iron Man, is one of the best.

The film is the best known work of Japanese director Shinya Tsukamoto, considered by many to be the father (or at least the best) of Japanese cyberpunk cinema.

Tsukamoto's style is unique and unforgettable. Dialogue is sparse, and when it appears it is simple and to the point. His films are generally done in black and white and often filmed in an intentionally chaotic manner, using industrial noise as a soundtrack instead of ambient noise or music.

Tetsuo contains all of these, and uses them to amazing effect, creating a bleak, immersive, albeit confusing film.

So far in 2010, Tsukamoto filmed his first film in English, and it is one of the very few that he has done in color.

Tetsuo: The Bullet Man is the third film in the trilogy that began with The Iron Man. The Bullet Man is a stand-out among today's sci-fi movies. The budget used was relatively low—about 1/100th of last year's Transformers movie—but it was money well spent. All of Tsukamoto's signature elements are present, and although the possibility of mainstream popularity is slim, it promises to be an excellent film.

Movie Review: Dear John

By Meghan Kelkar
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR

Kenny Kite obviously suffers from bittersweet emotions and a fluttering heart after seeing the movie.

Based on a Nicholas Sparks novel, Dear John opened in several Tulsa theaters on February 5.

Theaters were filled the first weekend, and the movie was so popular it actually pushed Avatar off the No. 1 selling movie spot in its seventh week.

The movie was considered by most critics to be an emotional roller coaster, but there are mixed feelings about the film itself.

In my opinion, the film could have followed the book better. In addition, they didn't include enough emotion such as the anticipation and passion John and Savannah demonstrated in the book, and I was disappointed that they changed the ending.

A few other girls at Riverfield had their opinions as well.

Ramsey Talladivedula said, "The movie kind of dragged on with boring sadness. The ending was disappointing as well."

Ashley Morton's opinion was, "The movie was good because I didn't read the book."

Bonnie Duffield said, "The book was better, but the movie was still good."

It seems reactions differ based on whether people read the book before seeing the movie. I suppose having high expectations for a film is understandable when you've read the book and know the plot, but maybe seeing the film without having read the book is better. Then you have no expectations except for it to be a good movie.

Game Review: COD: Modern Warfare 2

By Bryce Rossler
STAFF WRITER

In Call of Duty: Modern Warfare, the best selling first-person shooter game of all time, Infinity Ward made the transition from a World War II saga to modern times, basing the game on a fictional war with Russia.

Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2 is a continuation of such, characters and all, and the result is brilliance.

First and foremost, as with any Xbox 360 game, the graphics are stupendous. Other than a few shabby close-ups for environmental elements and a not-so-great job with dead bodies, the graphics are extremely realistic. From the specks of snow caught in Captain Price's beard to the detail of the guns, Infinity Ward did a fantastic job with their graphics design.

But in any action game, gameplay should be the most important, and CODMW2 certainly succeeds in making the plot its main strong point.

The sequel inherits the same principles of its precursor. The eighteen different missions can provide something for everybody, varying from stealth-heavy, suspenseful operations to a shoot-'em-up, bullet-riddled battlefield type mission.

Aside from its campaign mode, the five special ops modes are fun enough if you're good battling solo, and there's an online version for Xbox Live for those interactive multiplayer crazies.

With four different difficulty levels, it's easy enough to gradually improve yourself at this versatile, stimulating game.

CODMW2's only real fault lies within its ESRB rating, pegged at the despised-by-parents "Mature" for foul language, gore and violence, a potentially off-putting characteristic for those reserved about said elements.

The cost is between $49.99 and $69.99 depending on the store. But it's well worth ponying up because this game is superb.

Hey, cars are people, too!

By Ramsey Talladivedula
STAFF WRITER

Want to know something a lot of teenagers do? They name their cars.

Naming your car reflects both the car's personality and yours. Picking a name for a car isn't easy. When you first get your car, you have to wait for the personality to show.

Some popular ideas for names include famous people, things you like, the color, foreign names, and how the car acts. When you name your car, you became more attached to it. This can help you take care of your car. Meghan Kelkar says, "I think it's normal for girls to name cars. It brings out its personality."

First, you have to figure out if your car is male or female by judging how your car acts and looks. Most people can tell if they have a boy or girl car just by looking at it, kind of like people. But sometimes it's hard to figure out if a car is a boy or girl.

Zach Allen said he named his car Big Bertha. Kendall Cannon named her car Phoebe. I named my car Phyllis. These are just a few examples of the cars at Riverfield. Naming your car gives it more personality and sentimental value.

Pro: Scott Brown's election

By Carl Berry
STAFF WRITER

"This little campaign of ours was destined for greater things than any of us knew," Scott Brown said during his victory speech last month. He was right. His election was one of the most significant political events of the last 20 years.

Scott Brown, a little-known state senator from Massachusetts, didn't expect much from his campaign. He didn't expect to be thrown into the national spotlight. But he was. Brown's election was significant not only because he, a Republican, won a U.S. Senate seat in traditionally Democratic Massachusetts, but he won the Senate seat of the late Ted Kennedy, who had held it for almost 50 years.

He proved that no position or seat belongs to one party or person, but to the people. He proved that politicians can run a clean, issues-oriented campaign and be successful. He proved that democracy is not dead.

Finally, Scott Brown proved that party affiliation cannot divide us as Americans. "I met with people, looked them in the eye, shook their hand, and asked them for their vote," he said. "I didn't worry about their party affiliation, and they didn't worry about mine. It was simply shared conviction that brought us all together."

Maybe the rest of America can learn a similar lesson.

"This little campaign of ours was destined for greater things than any of us knew..."

Con: Scott Brown's election

By Bryce Rossler
OPINION EDITOR

Growing up, my favorite superhero was Batman. Batman saved people even though he was really just an average (although rich) guy that possessed no extraordinary powers at all. Yet he always protected the good, honest citizen from the harms of the world.

Now a new everyday guy is trying to fix the everyday American's problems. Already, claims that new Massachusetts senator Scott Brown has saved America are popping up, and they're hilariously preposterous.

The word "save" is defined as "to rescue from danger, possible harm, or injury." So I ask, what has Scott Brown done to save the United States? NOTHING. The federal deficit isn't miraculously back in the black, the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan aren't over, and universal healthcare hasn't been instituted yet.

These highly inflated claims are mainly being employed by right-wing nut jobs that hope the new Senator Brown will help enforce their ulterior Christian agenda that hides under the guise of the moniker "Republican." (And don't fall for such pseudo-unbiased, passive-aggressive Republicanism, either.)

What I want to know is this—why do so many people think this guy is significant? He's not. Not in the least. While it may end the Democrats' ability to break a filibuster, the Dems still hold the Senate majority, not to mention the White House.

Browns' swearing in to the Senate was held on February 11 to great fanfare from the media. But why is this even being addressed? Scott Brown didn't matter, doesn't matter, and won't EVER matter. The Republican Party's flawed agenda won't be enforced because of his presence and thus won't spite the average American.

You can bet, however, that Ted Kennedy is rolling over in his grave.

Haiti relief fundraisers

By Meghan Kelkar
EDITOR

Everyone should know by now about the devastating earthquake that occurred in Haiti on January 12. Now what can you do to raise money for the cause? There are a few options.

Thanks to the Red Cross, people can text "Haiti" to 9099 to donate ten dollars. There are already millions of people who have done this, and with aftershocks still occurring in Haiti, they need as much help as they can acquire.

PopCap Games is a website that is donating all the money spent on their games for aid to those recovering in Haiti. There are other sites that are also donating, and they are listed on www.mog-design.edu. Or you can go to www.foundation.aarp.org/HaitiRelief to donate.

Even celebrities are helping out. Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie have donated over $1 million to help the cause.

To be honest, there are many ways young people can help raise money. They may do so with a bake sale, using tips they gain from work, doing more chores or extra hours at work, or really anything extra.

The people of Haiti need as much money as they can possibly get and even if everyone only donates one dollar it will still help those who are suffering and recovering.

You could text Pizza Hut and spend $10 in a much more delicious way. But unfortunately, Pizza Hut does not contribute to Haiti survivors.

U.S. debt ceiling raised

By Sam Laney
STAFF WRITER

Democrats in the U. S. Senate recently passed legislation raising the debt ceiling to $1.9 trillion. A debt ceiling is the maximum borrowing power of a government. The past ceiling of $1.4 trillion was projected to be met by mid-February.

While finger pointing is inevitable, both parties share responsibility for the spiraling debt.

Last year's deficit of $1.4 trillion was a record high, and this year's spending promises to be just as high, possibly higher. The decrease in tax revenue and the Wall Street bailout substantially increased spending, promising to put us even further into the red.

There are two prevailing views on the debt ceiling increase: those who would rather deal with it now, and those who want to deal with it later.

Those who wish to deal with it now certainly have less overall debt to deal with. However, the problem exists that they would still have to deal with it. Those who wish to put it off decided to raise the ceiling to $1.9 trillion dollars so that it would not have to be dealt with until the next election.

Regardless of party affiliations, I believe it is time to start dealing with this issue. It is a big problem, and yes, it is possible that raising the limit will provide extra time to deal with it. But if the issue is not worked on now, the same problem will inevitably sneak up again, leading to a perpetual cycle of loosening the governing rules in order to avoid dealing with the problem.
